Permanent Link to Spectracom Debuts New GNSS Simulator Capabilities at ION-GNSS

2021/06/17

PORTLAND, Oregon — Spectracom announced at the ION-GNSS conference the introduction of new capabilities for its GSG line of GPS GNSS constellation simulators. These features reinforce Spectracom’s offerings for flexible, user-friendly, and affordable characterization and test of GPS and GNSS devices and systems. Key features include: GLONASS+GPS capability: the first in a line of GNSS simulators to simultaneously reproduce multiple GNSS signals, in accurate synchronization, for testing the latest multi-constellation receivers. The introduction of GSG StudioView PC software to provide easy creation and editing of simulation scenarios including a Google Maps-based trajectory builder. The ability to support very high velocity and acceleration simulations for aerospace applications. A web browser interface for easy remote control and monitoring of the simulator. Designed with development and test engineers in mind, the GSG-54 8-channel simulator and GSG-55 16-channel simulator support quick and efficient qualification of designs and performance under virtually any condition unlike live-sky or record-and-replay solutions, Spectracom said. Together with the simplicity, portability, and repeatability, users can run more tests, and extend the test set-up into manufacturing and final test environments. “As the integration of GPS receivers continue to proliferate in a wide range of devices, engineers need efficient and practical solutions to qualify the robustness of their designs and final assembled products. We understand the importance value plays in GPS and GNSS test solutions and are excited to introduce the ability to readily test complex scenarios at a price under $20K,” said Spectracom chief technical officer John Fischer. As a part of Spectracom’s focus on supporting fast and efficient test operations, the company also announced GSG StudioView PC software. In addition to Spectracom’s GSG simulators capability of configuration and operation without the need for an external computer, GSG StudioView allows users to build and manage complex simulation scenarios including visual trajectories. It also supports the import and conversion of trajectory files from other software applications and devices such as Google Earth. Spectracom also announced the new model GSG-56 GNSS constellation simulator with support for GPS and GLONASS receivers. "We understand the importance of the industry trend to augment GPS and ensure a high degree of reliability and affordability of new products and services that depend on new GNSS constellations," said Lisa Withers, Spectracom president and CEO. "Toward that end, we believe our newly expanded line of simulators will stand up to these challenges and with the new GSG-56 provide easy access to test multiple GNSS receivers." Availability of the GSG-56 is slated for the first quarter of 2012. The ION-GNSS conference runs September 21-23 at the Portland Convention Center. Spectracom is exhibiting with its sister company, SpectraTime, in booth #718.
